BIOGRAPHY

Madison McKamey is a cinematographer based in Paris and L.A.

Born in South Carolina, he discovered the industry through his mother's cousin, a cinematographer himself in the 90's. Seeing what happens on a set and behind the scenes inspired him a lot. And from there, he knew which path he wanted to follow.

Madison got admitted into Santa Monica College to study photography. Alongside his classes, he decided to work on Hollywood sets as an assistant and after one year and a half, he quit school so he could commit fully to his passion. During the following years, he worked on several projects until he fully professionalized himself as a director of photography.

Madison McKamey has since collaborated on various types of projects, such as commercials for brands like Louis Vuitton, Lacoste, Coach, Valentino, Mugler, Reebok and for fashion magazines Vogue or also Dazed. He also shot music videos for artists such as Whiz Khalifa, Fiji Blue, Machine Gun Kelly, or Tkay Maidza, and has also worked for television for companies like Vice, Hulu, E!, or Disney. He worked on multiple short films, as well as documentaries such as Steel Soldier, which was an incredible humanitarian experience for him.

Madison has traveled around the world for his passion for Cinema and a hunger for story telling. He hopes to be able to let his voice shine through his work by capturing the beauty of arts and life, as well as use his experience in the field to tell the story of the director through the lens.
